PROBLEMS SOLVED

The Public Oversight of Surveillance Technology (POST) Act requires the NYPD to publish impact and use policies for the surveillance technologies used by the Department. The NYPD is committed to increasing transparency related to the use of surveillance technology within the bounds of responsive, efficient, and effective policing.

AFFECTED COMMUNITIES

Today the New York City Council voted to pass the Public Oversight of Surveillance Technology (POST) Act, which will lift the curtain on the scope and scale of advanced surveillance technology used to track, police, and collect biometric data on New Yorkers.

PARTNERS

A new report from the Department of Investigation's Office of the Inspector General for the New York City Police Department (OIG-NYPD) confirms that the Adams Administration violated the Public Oversight of Surveillance Technology (POST) Act.

AFFECTED COMMUNITIES

This is the second time that the OIG-NYPD has cited the Adams Administration for circumventing this duly enacted law by grouping together different technologies to avoid issuing new policies, and by providing insufficient and inaccurate information.

AFFECTED COMMUNITIES

Doubling down on failed and abusive policing practices and flooding our subways with more police and surveillance cameras does not keep our communities safe.

AFFECTED COMMUNITIES

This expansion of police and cameras throughout our city and on our subways will only multiply the harm that the NYPD can do to New Yorkers who are just going about their daily lives.

LEGAL & COMPLIANCE LANDSCAPE

By requiring transparency and periods for public input, the POST Act is critical for community oversight over the use of surveillance technologies by the NYPD.

LEGAL & COMPLIANCE LANDSCAPE

The bills, which passed on April 10, 2025, bolstered the POST Act by tightening language that had allowed the NYPD to sidestep real transparency and adding additional reporting requirements.

CULTURAL NORMS

Video analytics, like facial recognition, can chill First Amendment activity by exposing individuals to persistent surveillance as they move about the city.
